

Celebrating Upstanders of the Movement

This February, we honor the lives of the Upstanders of the Civil Rights Movement. Also known as African American History Month, Black History Month originated as "Negro History Week" in 1926 by historian Carter G. Woodson to deepen the study and scholarship on African American history. It is due to the courageous Upstanders of the movement that slavery is abolished, discrimination based on "race, color, religion, or national origin" is banned, and all citizens have the right to vote.

In celebrating the pioneers who made our country less divided, we must recognize that February is not just a moment but a movement. The fight against racism continues with thousands speaking up and standing on the front line to address the disparities and socioeconomic inequality of our nation.

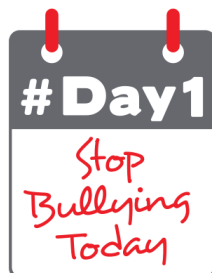

To create social change, it is our mission to establish safe and inclusive spaces that celebrate diversity. Our programs equip students, parents, and teachers with tools of prevention to address microaggressions and bullying behaviors in the classroom.
